

Call for Responses
THE VIRGINIA HUMANITIES CONFERENCE

Re-Visioning Our Teaching:
Making Connections in the Humanities in Virginia

March 30-April 1, 1995

Virginia Commonwealth University
Richmond, Virginia

The 1995 Virginia Humanities Conference will focus on discussions of how humanities programs in Virginia's colleges and universities are changing and re-thinking how they teach general education and introductory courses in response to current challenges and interdisciplinary emphases. A major goal of this conference is to make the Virginia Humanities Conference a more active humanities network, linked electronically to share insights and innovations about teaching in the humanities in Virginia.

In schools, departments, and individual classes, humanities professors are coming up with creative re-visions which address our common problems and challenges; it's time to share what we are learning. We are searching for these programs and people to present, demonstrate, and join forum discussions at the conference. Possible topics include:

- Teaching cultural diversity
- Creating community in large classes
- Connecting disciplines in the classroom
- Computers and foreign language teaching
- Hypertext and interactive computer applications
- Teaching Virginia history in new ways
- Electronic classroom communities
- Theory and introductions to literary studies
- Learning outside the classroom
- Portfolios and composition
- Learning on the Internet

If you or your institution is involved in such thinking "out of the box," please call, e-mail, or send a brief description by June 15, 1994 to:

Professor Ann Woodlief
President, Virginia Humanities Conference
Box 842005, VCU
Richmond VA 23284-2005
(804) 828-1331
awood@hibbs.vcu.edu